

Among the most dangerous enemies we humans face are our own distant relatives, the microbes. No human being can long withstand their onslaught unprotected. We survive because the human body has a variety of effective defenses against this constant attack.

